The Northeast Corridor (NEC) is an electrified railroad line in the Northeast megalopolis of the United States. Owned primarily by Amtrak, it runs from Boston in the north to Washington, D., in the south, with major stops in Providence, New Haven, Stamford, New York City, Newark, Trenton. It's not technically in the commuter network I know, but the lack of Hell Gate Line is bothering me. TBF, neither the Empire Connection nor the Hell Gate section have any stations, so they don't really need to be there. Until Penn Station Access becomes reality and maybe the old West Side Line is.
